Why did we give you this booklet?

We gave you this booklet because a child protection worker has visited your home to see if your child is safe.

A child protection worker:

- works for the government

- talks to people to find out if a child is safe

- works to keep children safe.

The child protection worker has sent a form to the Children's Court.

The Children's Court is a place where legal decisions about a child can be made.

We call it a case when there is a legal problem about a child that goes to the Children's Court.

At the Children's Court, a magistrate will decide:

- if your child is safe
- how to keep your child safe
- what your child needs.

A magistrate is an officer of the Children's Court who makes a decision about a child's case.

You need to go to the Children's Court so a magistrate can:

- hear your child's case
- make a decision about your child's case.

This might be stressful.

You can bring a support person with you, such as a:

- friend
- family member
- support worker
- advocate – someone who helps you speak up for yourself.

Where will your child live while the Children's Court makes a decision?

Some children can live at home while the Children's Court makes a decision about their case.

Sometimes children or parents need to move somewhere else.

Sometimes a child might live away from their home until the magistrate decides if they can live at home again.

If a child can live at home again, their case might:

- end

- keep going.

If your child must live away from home, a child protection worker will talk with you about a safe place where your child can live.

Your child might live with a:

- family member
- friend.

The child protection worker will work out if the home is safe for your child.

If there is no safe home for your child, they might go into foster care.

Foster care is when a child lives:

- in a home with a family you don't know
- with people who look after children who might not be safe.

You might be able to talk to your child while they live away from home.

You might be able to see them as well.

This might be part of a court order.

A court order is when a magistrate tells you what you must:

- do
- not do.

What if you want your child to live at home?

If you want your child to live with you, you need a legal representative who will talk to the Children's Court.

A legal representative is someone who can:

- give you legal support
- support you with legal decisions.

The Children's Court will decide if your child can live with you.

Getting legal help

You might want legal help with your case.

You can get help from a legal representative.

You can get help from a legal service, such as Victoria Legal Aid (VLA).

You can call them on 1300 792 387.

VLA is an organisation that can give you free:

- information about the law
- legal advice.

The Law Institute of Victoria may be able to help you find a legal representative.

You can call them on (03) 9607 9311.

You can also get help from a legal service in your local community.

If you are Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander, you might want to use an Aboriginal legal service.

You can contact one of these legal services yourself or Victorian Legal Aid can help you get a legal representative from one of these services.

You can call the Victorian Aboriginal Legal Service.

1800 064 865

You can also call Djirra.

1800 105 303

Djirra used to be called the Aboriginal Family Violence Prevention and Legal Service Victoria.

Getting ready for the Children's Court

To get ready for the Children's Court, you will need information about:

- where you need to go to
- when you need to be there.

The child protection worker will give you this information.

You can also get legal advice before you go to the Children's Court.

This will help you decide if you want your own legal representative with you in the Children's Court.

If you don't already have your own legal representative, Victoria Legal Aid (VLA) will organise one for you.

30 minutes

Make sure you arrive at the Children's Court at least 30 minutes before your child's case starts.

This means you will have time to talk to your legal representative.

If you need an interpreter to help you, ask a child protection worker to get one for you.

An interpreter is someone who:

- speaks your language
- helps you understand what someone is saying.

The interpreter will help you:

- understand what's happening in the Children's Court
- by telling you what is being said in the Children's Court
- tell everyone in the Children's Court what you are saying.

Does my child need to go to court?

Your child doesn't need to go to the Children's Court.

They can go if:

- they choose to
- the Children's Court asks them to.

Children aged 10 years or older will have their own legal representative.

The child's legal representative will speak for them in the Children's Court.

What happens at Children's Court?

Arriving at court

When you arrive at the Children's Court, you will go through the security screening.

When you get inside, you need to go to the court registry.

You might have to wait before your child's case starts.

The Children's Court can be very busy.

You should talk to you legal representative while you wait for your child's name to be called out.

When your child's name is called out, you can go inside the court room.

In the court room

Please:

- turn your phone off before you go in

- stay quiet

- follow the instructions of the court.

You will sit behind your legal representative.

You can bring a support person with you,
such as a:

- friend

- family member

- advocate.

You might be able to sit with:

- your child
- a support person.

The Children's Court will want to hear about:

- your child's case

- your family life

- why the child protection worker thinks your child is not safe.

The Children's Court might ask you what you think about what the child protection worker says.

They will also ask your legal representative.

The Children's Court might ask your child what they think about what the child protection worker says.

They will also ask your child's legal representative.

The Children's Court might get reports about:

- your child
- other members of your family
- you.

These reports might be from:

- the child protection worker

- other people or services who know you and your child, such as a doctor.

The Children's Court might ask these people if they think your child is safe.

If you talk about your child's case in the Children's Court, you must:

- tell the truth

- answer questions from people who know and understand the law

- ask for help if you don't understand what people say.

You must call the magistrate:

- 'Your Honour'
- 'Madame'
- 'Sir'.

Going to the Children's Court more than once

You might have to go to the Children's Court more than once.

The Children's Court can ask you to come back on another day.

In the meantime, the Children's Court will decide if your child will stay:

- at home with you

- at the home of a family member or friend

- in a place picked by the Children's Court, like foster care.

This will be until the next time you go to the Children's Court.

When you go to the Children's Court in the future

Everyone must agree about what is right for your child, including:

- you
- the Children's Court
- the child protection worker
- your child.

If you can't agree, the magistrate will decide what is right for your child.

If the magistrate decides your child is safe, then:

- your child's case will end

- contact between your family and the child protection worker will stop.

If the magistrate believes your child is not safe, they will say:

- what your child needs

- how to keep your child safe.

The magistrate will explain why they made their decision.

If you don't understand their reasons, you can talk to:

- your legal representative

- a child protection worker.

If you do not agree with the magistrate's decision, you can ask for the decision to change.

We call this an appeal.

You can talk to your legal representative about an appeal.
